FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE:

RESEARCH AND REVIEW SERIES

CHARLESTON, IL--Eastern Illinois University has published "Nature of Language" by Gertrude Hendrix, the first issue of its new Research and Review Series.

Miss Hendrix taught mathematics mostly on the secondary level at Eastern Illinois University from 1930 to 1956. She retired as Associate Professor Emerita from the University of Illinois, Urbana, to her farm in Putnam County, Indiana, in 1966.

"Nature of Language" includes three articles entitled "Unverbalized Awareness as an Agency for Transfer of Learning," "Anecdotal Reports of Incidents which gave Rise to Hypotheses Pertinent to the Proposed Research," and "Semantic Referents for Logical Constants - A Genetic Theory of The Nature of Language."

Copies are available at the EIU Foundation House, University Relations (Old Main 111) and the University Union Book Store.

The new Research and Review Series has been funded in part by Chenault Kelly. Her gift to the Eastern Illinois Foundation is to enable faculty members - both past and present - and alumni of the college of Liberal Arts and Sciences to publish occasional papers of merit.

The series may serve not only as recognition for the authors but also as worthwhile sources for Eastern Illinois University's future teachers and students.

"A university needs such a series," President Stan Rives said. He will appoint an editorial board composed of five faculty and emeritus faculty members to administer the Research and Review Series.
